child spends on. Prenatal and neonatal prevention of miscarriage. Miscarriage, defined as spontaneous, premature labor or abortion, occurs in as many as one in three pregnancies and is associated with a loss of quality of life as well as morbidity and mortality in subsequent pregnancies. The incidence of recurrent miscarriage, defined as three or more consecutive pregnancy losses or three or more fetal losses prior to viability, is as high as 50% to 80% among first-time affected couples. The current standard management is expectant management that entails surveillance with serial ultrasound examinations of the fetus with routine repeat cervical cultures to detect asymptomatic bacteria causing chorioamnionitis and symptomatic genital tract infection. The effectiveness of standard management in reducing the incidence of miscarriage and the occurrence of adverse maternal and perinatal outcomes has been established in a number of randomized controlled trials. Pregnancy loss in the uterus of any etiology and miscarriage in the first trimester of pregnancy are associated with increased risks of subsequent pregnancy loss and miscarriage, whereas pregnancy loss in the second trimester does not appear to have a significant negative effect on subsequent pregnancy outcome. Our aim is to review current evidence regarding the management of pregnancy loss and pregnancy failure in the hope of providing evidence-based guidelines to assist clinicians caring for patients who experience recurrent pregnancy loss.
